Theme & sub-themes

News media material published online is an important first draft of history as the printed newspaper and broadcast news has been and still is. The digital transformation of news multiplies the usage and current online news media constantly develop new channels and modes of communication, redefine the roles of all stakeholders and transform the news in an infinite process.

The IFLA 2015 International News Media Conference has as its focus the transformation aspects of born digital news media and the implications for long term archiving and access.

The main theme of the conference is Transformation of the online news media: implications for preservation and access with the following possible sub-themes – and papers chosen for presentation should address, but are not limited to:

- Reporting the news in the digital and social media age: from big corporations to citizen journalism
- Trends in the news media market
- The advertising industry and its influence on online news media
- Latest initiatives and technologies in online news media preservation and access
- Challenges in archiving, preserving and using online audiovisual material

- Text mining born digital news content
- Issues of e-legal deposit: online news media
- Web harvesting of online news media
- Issues on long term access to and preservation of news databases
- Services built on born digital newspaper collections
- Research being done on the basis of born digital news media collections
- Users' experiences with born digital news media collections - usability expectations
- Integrating born digital news media and digitized newspaper and audiovisual news collections

Other proposals relevant to the main conference theme will also be considered.

The day before the conference, April 14, the Center for Research Libraries, Chicago will hold a digitization summit in conjunction with the IFLA News Media (Newspapers) and Audio Visual Sections. The theme of the workshop is to create consensus on priorities for future digitization and it is intended for major actors in the newspaper digitization community.
