PREAMBLE

This Code of Ethics and Professional Conduct is offered as a series of ethical propositions for the guidance of individual librarians as well as other information workers, and for the consideration of Library and Information Associations when creating or revising their own codes.

The function of codes of ethics can be described as:
- encouraging reflection on principles on which librarians and other information workers can form policies and handle dilemmas
- improving professional self consciousness
- providing transparency to users and society in general.

This code is not intended to replace existing codes or to remove the obligation on professional associations to develop their own codes through a process of research, consultation and cooperative drafting.

This code is offered in the belief that:
- Librarianship is, in its very essence, an ethical activity embodying a value-rich approach to professional work with information.
- Human beings are physically weak, but intellectually powerful. From the earliest times they have necessarily organised themselves socially so as to survive and prosper. In society they have shared resources, work and information.
- The need to share ideas and information has grown more important with the increasing complexity of society in recent centuries and this provides a rationale for libraries and the practice of librarianship.
- The role of information institutions and professionals, including libraries and librarians, in modern society is to support the optimisation of the recording and representation of information and to provide access to it.
- Information service in the interest of social, cultural and economic well-being is at the heart of librarianship and therefore librarians have social responsibility.

Furthermore, this belief in the human necessity of sharing information and ideas implies the recognition of information rights. The idea of human rights, particularly as expressed in the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights (1948), requires us all to recognise and acknowledge the humanity of others and to respect their rights. In particular, Article 19 sets out rights of freedom of opinion, expression and access to information for all human beings.
Article 19 expressly sets out a right to “Seek, receive and impart information and ideas in any media and regardless of frontiers” which provides a clear rationale for libraries and the practice of modern and progressive librarianship. IFLA in statements, manifestos and policy and technical documents too numerous to list has expanded the understanding of work with information. Implicit in this work is the idea of information rights and their significance for the profession and society generally. The emphasis on information rights in turn obliges librarians and other information workers to develop a principled critique of relevant law and to be prepared to advise and, if appropriate, advocate the improvement of both the substance and administration of laws.

The clauses of this code of ethics build on the core principles outlined in this preamble to provide a set of suggestions on the conduct of professionals. IFLA recognises that whilst these core principles should remain at the heart of any such code, the specifics of codes will necessarily vary according to the particular society, community of practice or virtual community. Code making is an essential function of a professional association, just as ethical reflection is a necessity for all professionals. IFLA recommends the Code of Ethics for IFLA to all its member associations and institutions and to individual librarians and information workers for these purposes.

IFLA undertakes to revise this code whenever appropriate.

1. ACCESS TO INFORMATION

The core mission of librarians and other information workers is to ensure access to information for all for personal development, education, cultural enrichment, economic activity and informed participation in and enhancement of democracy.

Librarians and other information workers reject the denial and restriction of access to information and ideas most particularly through censorship whether by states, governments, or religious or civil society institutions.

Librarians and other information workers offering services to the public should make every endeavour to offer access to their collections and services free of cost to the user. If membership fees and administrative charges are inevitable, they should be kept as low as possible, and practical solutions found so that socially disadvantaged people are not excluded.

Librarians and other information workers promote and publicise their collection and services so that users and prospective users are aware of their existence and availability.

Librarians and other information workers use the most effective ways to make the material accessible to all. For this purpose they seek to ensure that the websites of libraries and related institutions comply with international standards for accessibility and access to them is not subject to barriers.
2. RESPONSIBILITIES TOWARDS INDIVIDUALS AND SOCIETY

In order to promote inclusion and eradicate discrimination, librarians and other information workers ensure that the right of accessing information is not denied and that equitable services are provided for everyone whatever their age, citizenship, political belief, physical or mental disability, gender, immigration and asylum-seeking status, marital status, origin, race, religion or sexual orientation.

Librarians and other information workers respect language minorities of a country and their right to access information in their own language.

Librarians other information workers organize and present content in a way that allows an autonomous user to find the information s/he needs. Librarians and other information workers help and support users in their information searching.

Librarians and other information workers offer services to increase reading skills. They promote information literacy including the ability to identify, locate, evaluate, organize and create, use and communicate information. And they promote the ethical use of information thereby helping to eliminate plagiarism and other forms of misuse of information.

Librarians and other information workers respect the protection of minors while ensuring this does not impact on the information rights of adults.

3. PRIVACY, SECRECY AND TRANSPARENCY

Librarians and other information workers respect the personal privacy of everyone, except where it is in the public interest that misconduct, corruption and crime be exposed. Furthermore they respect the protection of personal data, necessarily shared between individuals and institutions.

The relationship between the library and the user is one of confidentiality and librarians and other information workers will take appropriate measures to ensure that user data is not shared beyond the original transaction.

Librarians and other information workers support transparency so that the workings of government, administration and business are opened to the scrutiny of the general public.

At the same time librarians and other information workers recognise that there is a legitimate sphere of government, business and industrial secrecy that will under certain circumstances and for limited periods of time restrict access to carefully defined and limited categories and items of information.
4. OPEN ACCESS AND INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY

Librarians and other information workers are partners of authors, publishers and other creators of copyright protected works. Librarians and other information workers’ interest is to provide the best possible access for library users to information and ideas in any media or format.

Librarians and other information workers promote the principles of open access, open source, open licenses and other means of providing fair, swift, economical and effective access to information for users.

Librarians and other information workers recognise the intellectual property right of authors and other creators and will seek to ensure that their moral rights are respected as completely as possible so that they get the recognition that their creativity deserves.

Librarians and other information workers also recognise that creators deserve financial reward for their creativity and therefore support the protection of their copyright protected works offered by Article 27 of the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

Librarians and other information workers negotiate the most favourable licence and purchase terms for access to works with rights holders, on behalf of their users and seek to ensure that access is not unnecessarily prevented or hindered by the mode of administration of intellectual property laws. It is also the profession’s duty to advocate for exceptions and limitations to copyright restrictions for libraries.

Librarians and other information workers seek to encourage governments to establish an intellectual property regime that favours the development and protection of national and local creativity.

Librarians and other information workers also advocate that copyright restrictions should not be expanded beyond a reasonable time limitation and ensure that information that has fallen in the public domain remains public and free.

5. NEUTRALITY, PERSONAL INTEGRITY AND PROFESSIONAL SKILLS

Librarians and other information workers are strictly committed to neutrality and an unbiased stance regarding collection, access and service. Neutrality results in the most balanced collection and the most balanced access to information achievable.
Librarians and other information workers define and publish their policies for selection, organisation, preservation, provision, and dissemination of information.

Librarians and other information workers distinguish between their personal convictions and professional duties. They do not advance private interests or personal beliefs at the expense of neutrality.

Librarians and other information workers have the right to free speech in the workplace provided it does not infringe the principle of neutrality towards users.

Librarians and other information workers counter corruption directly affecting librarianship, as in the sourcing and supply of library materials, appointments to library posts and administration of library contracts and finances.

Librarians and other information workers strive for excellence in the profession by maintaining and enhancing their knowledge and skills. They aim at the highest standards of service quality and thus promote the positive reputation of the profession.

6. COLLEAGUE AND EMPLOYER/EMPLOYEE RELATIONSHIP

Librarians and other information workers treat each other with fairness and respect.

Librarians and other information workers oppose discrimination in any aspect of employment because of age, citizenship, political belief, physical or mental disability, gender, marital status, origin, race, religion or sexual orientation.

Librarians and other information workers promote equal payment and benefits for men and women holding comparable jobs.

Librarians and other information workers share their professional experience with colleagues and they help and guide new professionals to enter the professional community.

Librarians and other information workers strive to earn a reputation and status based on their professionalism and moral character, and do not compete with colleagues by the use of unfair methods.
Further Study

Professional Codes of Ethics for Librarians. IFLA-Committee on Freedom of Access to Information and Free Expression (FAIFE).