Libraries are increasingly using the potential of digital tools to carry out their work. These tools have allowed for more effective preservation, faster research, new and exciting means of teaching, and more opportunities to access culture than ever before. However, copyright exceptions can stand in the way when they are not adapted, for example by limiting numbers of copies, or by allowing the terms of contracts, or digital locks, to prevent uses permitted in law.

Can a Library Take Digital Copies for Internal Library Work?
As libraries move to use digital tools to manage collections, including for the insurance and other purposes set out above, they need digital-ready exceptions. YES = 0, NO = 33

Can a Library Make Digital Copies of Works for Research?
Libraries are keen to ensure that new techniques such as text and data mining, which involve digital copying, are available, to support researchers more flexibly. YES = 7, NO = 26

Can a Library Make Digital Copies of Works for Preservation?
Digitisation offers an effective way of ensuring the possibility to access works in the future, as well as to record those at risk of disappearing forever because of physical damage. YES = 1, NO = 32

If a Digital Lock is Stopping Me from Doing My Job, Can a Library Get It Removed?
Articles, eBooks and other digital materials often come with ‘digital locks’. These help prevent illegal activities, such as making and selling of copies (piracy) without permission. However, they can also prevent libraries from carrying out their missions. Many countries, however, do not give libraries any possibility to remove them.

If a Contract Prevents a Library from Using an Exception, is the Clause Applicable?
Libraries are often in a relatively weak position in negotiations to acquire digital materials. Either they have little scope to ask for greater rights or licensing contracts are ‘shrink-wrap’ (i.e. libraries must accept the terms or cannot access the materials they want). However, to disapply contract terms without infringing the contract, there need to be specific provisions.
