Seven Statements on European University Presses (2017)

“European university presses play an important role in scholarly communication. The following statements declared by AEUP stress their relevance and position them as important stakeholders and partners of politics and research alike. [...]”

1. European UPs are there to make European diversity (languages, cultures, specific disciplines) in its scholarly communication visible.
2. European UPs bring benefits and services to their host institution.
3. Access to scientific communication needs to be as free as possible to let society benefit from research. Open Access and Open Science are the rightmeans to reach these objectives.
4. The publishing programme is built on discipline-specific standards, quality assurance and selectivity.
5. The business models of the European UPs follow their mission.
6. To face pending challenges for society, we need to unlock the full potential of scientific communication in Humanities and qualitative Social Sciences. Funding models and beneficial infrastructure (including governance structures) for open access monographs are a prerequisite.
7. AEUP and its members are essential partners in shaping the framework for the aforementioned goals in Europe.
